NEWS FLASH

OUR LATEST RESEARCH

May was a busy month for GFLEC. We released two new reports highlighting the need for financial education among Millennials and in our schools. The motivation is there, but are the resources?

With the support of the Singleton Foundation for Financial Literacy and Entrepreneurship, GFLEC released on May 1, "Millennials' Engagement with Online Financial Education Resources and Tools," a study on how Millennials learn about personal finance topics.

On May 14, GFLEC released "Raising Awareness of the Importance of Personal Finance in School" a project done with the support of the Calvin K. Kazanjian Economics Foundation. This study examines in depth how awareness, motivation, and confidence in teaching personal finance topics can influence financial education in schools.

Thank you to both foundations for making these two insightful research opportunities possible. For more information on how to partner with GFLEC, email us at gfilec@gwu.edu.

Let's work together to create a financially literate world where people can achieve their dreams.

Kind regards,
Annamaria Lusardi
